MR MAHON'S CONCERT

NOT being well attended, on account of some mistake in having it postponed, the Governor and Directors of the Musical Society have advised him to take another, which is fixed for Tuesday the 4th of April.

MR MAHON hopes, that the Lovers of Music will favour him with their company on the above night, being his last time of performing in Edinburgh.

The Battle-Piece that was omitted at his first Concert, will be performed, as there will be a very full band, and all the Instrumental Pieces will be entirely new.

Tickets (Price Three Shillings) to be had at Mr Mahon's Lodgings, Advocate's Close, third stair, left hand, first door; and at the Music Shops.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, March 20.

READ a second time the shop-tax bill.

CONVERSATION ON THE MUTINY BILL.

On the motion that the mutiny bill be committed,

Lord Carlisle wished to hear from some of the noble Lords in Administration, an explanation of the new clause in the bill which subjected brevet officers to the martial law. It was an innovation, and for that reason their Lordships ought to be informed of the principles on which it was founded.

Lord Sydney stated, that as the law had formerly stood, many cases occurred which were attended with much difficulty. The meaning therefore of the clause in question was, that all similar inconveniences might for the future be avoided. His Lordship mentioned the case of General Stuart in the East Indies, and observed, that it was intended to extend the law to all denominations of officers who should act under the brevet; and there were a very numerous class of individuals, such as governors of distant dependencies, and others who had the King's commission. For these purposes the present clause was thought necessary, and he trusted their Lordships would be of the same opinion.

Lord Stormont contended, that officers could not act by brevet only, without a letter from his Majesty's Ministers, or letters of service, directing the circumstances of the service. He desired to be corrected if this principle was not founded on military practice. On this presumption he thought himself entitled to argue against the present clause, as a provision against a case perfectly chimerical. He trusted their Lordships would advert to the case of young gentlemen, who often assumed titles from the military profession for the convenience of travelling. Would their Lordships give their sanction to a measure which went to subject persons of this description to martial law? Indeed he saw the matter as drawing along with it so many pernicious effects, that he hoped the wisdom of their Lordships would interfere, and prevent the consequences which it threatened.

Lord Effingham said, the words in the commission were a sufficient answer to what the noble Viscount had observed. It was in fact an order from his Majesty, commanding all persons, in subordinate rank, to obey the person thus commissioned. He could not think the noble Viscount serious in apprehending any danger to those young gentlemen who thought a Captain a good travelling title. His Lordship put the case of an invasion, and argued, that unless brevet officers were subject to martial law, it would even on such a pressing emergency as this be a good reason for not suffering them to act, and consequently the country might be deprived of their assistance when it was most wanted. Indeed he had always understood, before he had seen a late opinion of the twelve judges, that they were subject to the law as military men; and the contrary, in his opinion, involved a very obvious absurdity.

The Duke of Manchester expressed his dislike to the clause in very strong terms. He thought officers, under the description, and in the predicament referred to, were still accountable to their country for their conduct. He did not think the case of young gentlemen travelling as brevet officers so light or trivial a matter as the Noble Earl had alledged.

His Grace had travelled himself as an ensign, and he believed, still had rank as such in the army. He mentioned also several instances, in which officers, thus situated, had been called to an account for their conduct. He did not see the necessity of the innovation. It was founded on principles which he could not approve. Its tendency was to abridge the common law of the country. And though he did not wish to impede the measures of Government, this was a case of no ordinary importance, and in his mind every Member of either House of Parliament was bound to give it all the opposition in his power.

Lord Carlisle had always considered the whole system of martial law as an infringement of the constitution, which the most indispensable necessity only could justify. Would any noble Lord in the Administration pretend that such a necessity existed in the present case? The remedy supposed an evil which had no reality in fact. It was therefore a wanton encroachment on those privileges which were every Englishman's birthright. He should refer to a amendment until the bill was committed, but he could not help expressing his astonishment at the introduction of a clause so perfectly unnecessary, and big with consequences so very objectionable.

Lord Portchester condemned the clause, as conveying an idea that every person who had once belonged to the military was to all intents and purposes a soldier for life. This he never would admit. It was unconstitutional, and what ever tended to such a doctrine should have his opposition.

Lord Sydney said, he had been condemned for saying too little; he would probably now be censured for saying too much. He was, however, anxious that he might not be misunderstood. He therefore repeated what he had formerly stated, and intimated the incompetence of their Lordships' interference with bills which came in this shape from the other House, as such an interference might ultimately endanger the success of the measure.

Lord Stormont asserted the competence of their Lordships to amend whatever bills were subjected to their cognizance. Their Lordships, in his opinion, without such a power, assembled to no purpose whatever; and the form of submitting bills to their consideration, which they were not in a capacity to alter, was by no means consonant with the dignity which became them as a branch of the British Legislature. This was a point which he trusted would not be contested. He would say no more to the question before their Lordships, but that it was not likely to produce any general alarm, though every man of sensibility must, as he did very sincerely, commiserate the situations of those persons whom the act, thus altered, was calculated to affect.

The Lord Chancellor coincided with entire satisfaction in the opinion delivered by the noble Viscount, relating to the alteration of bills originating in the other House. While he had the honour of a seat among their Lordships, he would give his implicit consent to no bill which came before them, unless such care was taken of it as that no alteration was necessary. He had not apprehended any debate would have taken place on the clause, at least in this stage of the business. He quoted the articles of war, and argued from them that officers were bound to act by brevet. It was the commission which conferred the power. Letters of service gave a direction only to the authority thus conferred, but in fact conferred none. And he observed, that the reason of the thing substantiated the property of it. No man should enter into a profession without submitting to its inconveniences, as well as sharing its privileges. If men would be soldiers, they should not be excepted from the laws of the profession. He had no objection to annihilate the commissions by brevet, but he had no reason to continue it as an exception to the general practice and laws of the army.

Lord Townshend conceived the subject to be much more serious than seemed to be admitted by their Lordships. He had nothing to fear from that or any other innovation which could happen in the present reign, or indeed from the present family. But he would not answer for what might happen under a reign or a government less friendly to liberty. In fact, it afforded a despotic Prince an opportunity, in cases of public disturbance, of wounding in the tenderest part the constitution of the country.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 20.

PASSED the Surrey coal-meters bill.

Also passed the Alton harbour bill.

Ordered the militia bill to be engrossed.

In a Committee went through the bill for securing the freedom of elections, with several amendments. Agreed to the report of the resolutions of Friday last on the supply.

Read a second time the bill for the recovery of small debts at Folkestone and at Deal.

FISHERIES.

Mr Jenkinson gave notice, that to-morrow he would make a motion relative to the fisheries.

INDIA BILL.

The bill for altering and amending the act for the better management of the affairs of the East India Company, being read a second time.

Mr Dundas moved, that it be committed for Wednesday next.

Mr Francis was of opinion, that Wednesday was too early a day for the decision of a business of so much importance.

Mr Dundas said, there were very pressing and substantial reasons why the bill should be carried through with as much dispatch as the forms of the House would admit; most of the India ships were already failed, and the object of the bill rendered it necessary that it should be sent out this season.

Mr Francis allowed, that the Hon. Gentleman's reasons were very substantial; they only proved, however, that the bill ought to have been brought in sooner, but did not warrant its being adopted hastily, or without that serious deliberation which its magnitude demanded.

Mr Joliffe thought the bill one of the most important that could engage the attention of the House. The proposed alterations were such as invested the Governor General of Bengal with unheeded power and authority. He was not afraid that the noble Lord who had been lately appointed to that high office would make an improper use of it, but future Governors might. He also threw additional influence into the hands of Government, which the House could not be too jealous. The day proposed by the Hon. Gentleman was certainly too near for Gentlemen to consider the business properly; it would therefore move, instead of Wednesday, that Friday be the day for going into a Committee on the bill.

Mr Francis seconded the motion.

Mr Dundas persisted in the propriety of taking it into consideration on Wednesday.

Sir James Erskine and Mr Super spoke each a few words for substituting Friday instead of Wednesday, and expressed their astonishment, that in such a momentous business the Hon. Gentleman should attempt to hurry the bill through the House with such indecent precipitation.

The question on the amendment was then put, when the House divided, and the numbers were,

Ayes	—	29
Noes	—	53

Majority against the amendment, 24.

The original motion was then put, and carried without a division.

ABERDEENSHIRE ELECTION.

Sir Adam Ferguson presented a petition in the name of Mr Ferguson of Pitfour, complaining of an undue election for the county of Aberdeen; he then moved that the same be taken into consideration on Tuesday the 9th of May.

The Earl of Fife expressed his surprise that the Hon. Baronet should move so late a day. He had written to his Hon. Friend who had been returned for the county, as soon as he heard that a petition was intended to be presented against him, and he had reason to believe that he would take his seat in a few days; unless therefore the Hon. Baronet would assign some reason for the delay, he certainly would oppose the motion. His Lordship then moved that the petition be taken into consideration on Thursday the 27th of April, instead of Tuesday the 9th of May.

Sir William Cunningham seconded the motion, as he could not see the smallest reason for postponing the petition till so late a period of the session. It would be extremely inconvenient for the gentlemen of the Scotch bar, several of whom were now in town, to be kept here till near the time when the Court of Session should again sit down. In this view he thought the 27th of April the most eligible day.

Sir Adam Ferguson did not know of any Scotch counsel who were in town, except those who were Members of the House.

Sir William Cunningham begged leave to inform him, that Mr Wight, one of the most eminent lawyers now at the Scotch bar, was in town, and several others were expected in a few days; he hoped therefore the Hon. Baronet, if he persisted in his motion, would be pleased to give the House some substantial reason for it.

Sir Adam made no reply.

The Speaker expecting the House would divide, ordered the gallery to be cleared, but Sir Adam Ferguson withdrew his motion. Lord Fife's motion was then put and agreed to, so that the petition stands for the 27th of April.

MENAI BRIDGE.

The order of the day was then read for the second reading of the bill for building a bridge across the straits of Menai, in the county of Carnarvon, and counsel called to the bar, when, upon a motion of Lord Penrhyn, the further hearing of counsel was deferred till to-morrow evening.

After which the House adjourned.

FROM THE LONDON PAPERS, March 21.

Row, Feb. 17. The Right Hon. Lord Brett, a virtuous and liberal encourager of the fine arts, being a few days ago at the Villa Medicis, to examine the paintings exhibited there, was struck (among other things) with the works of Mr Berger, a young pupil, native of Savoy. The English nobleman particularly admired his print of Epaminondas drawing the spear from his bowels; he immediately enquired for the author of it, purchased all his pictures at the price he set upon them, made him a present besides of 600 livres Tournois, and settled a pension of 50 l. per annum during his life, on condition that he shall yearly furnish him with a picture which his genius may suggest to him, and for which his benefactor will pay him, independent of his said pension.

LONDON, March 21.

On Tuesday last his Excellency Thomas Jefferson, Minister Plenipotentiary from the United States of America to the Court of France, arrived in London, and on Wednesday was introduced to the King at St James's by his Excellency John Adams, Esq; and on Thursday to the Queen.

It is conjectured by those that pretend to be wise, that Mr Jefferson's visiting England is on the subject of an American treaty.

On Tuesday arrived in town from Paris, Col. Smith, Secretary to the American Ambassador at Court.

On Saturday last arrived at the Hotel in Pall Mall, Stephen Sayre, Esq; sometime since one of the Sheriffs of the City of London, but lately Minister from the United States of America to the Court of Madrid, from which capital he is just returned.

Colonel Tarleton is appointed Secretary to Lord Cornwallis, who is going over with new powers as Governor-General of Bengal.

This morning, about eight o'clock, an express arrived at St James's, from Dublin, said to contain matters of great importance: It was immediately sent off to His Majesty at Windsor.

During the Opera on Saturday night, while their Majesties were in the theatre, a young personage spoke his evening in the box of Mrs F——. It was noticed as a singular circumstance, and the buzz in the coffee-room was in consequence more audible than ever.

The House of Commons, on Friday, in a Committee of supply, voted 365,616 l. 2 s. 4 d. halfpenny, to make good the deficiency of the commutation act.

16,588 l. 4 s. 6 d. three farthings, to make good the deficiencies of supply granted by act 31. Geo. II.

180,357 l. 10 s. 6 d. halfpenny to make good the deficiencies of supply granted by act 18. Geo. III.

15,991 l. 5 s. 2 d. halfpenny, to make good the deficiencies granted by act 19. Geo. III.

The House of Commons yesterday, in a Committee of Ways and Means, resolved, — "That towards raising the Supply granted to his Majesty, there be applied 532,488 l. 15 s. 9 d. halfpenny remaining in the Exchequer, on the 5th day of January, 1785, of the Surplus of the sinking fund."

As soon as the Committee, appointed to examine the state of the public income and expenditure, have made their report, which, it is expected, they will do in the course of a few days, another Committee of the House of Commons is to be appointed, to deliberate upon that part of the subject which relates to the surplus; and to this second Committee it will be an instruction (public or private) to recommend a new Commission, under the Great Seal, for the establishment of a new office at the Bank, where persons desirous of selling their property in the funds, at the market prices, may be always accommodated. The property, thus sold, will be so much of the national debt paid off. By this excellent plan, the price of stocks will certainly be kept up, and the value of land will be as certainly raised.

"The bill was introduced into the House of Commons, and seconded by Mr Erskine, the clauses being read.

Mr Minchin, of the ship's crew, said, that some clause in the bill would be carried, to be read again.

As soon as the bill was read, Mr Pitt, of the militia, moved, that the bill be read again.

Mr Pitt, of the militia, moved, that the bill be read again.

Mr Pitt,

more and more infectious. Mr Pitt said, he was aware 'twas necessary it was to guard against contagious disorders, but that, in the present case, there was no reason for the alarm that was spread. He, therefore, should move for leave to bring in a bill, to empower certain persons therin mentioned, to move the ship's company, on some convenient place afloat, where their health might be attended to; and to empower the said persons to buy, or if none were willing to sell, to seize on a piece of ground for erecting such a place as might be convenient for the purpose. Mr Pitt then moved the question, and wished, as the bill admitted of no delay, that it might be gone through in as summary a way as possible. The motion was unanimously agreed to, and a bill ordered in accordingly.

" The bill was then brought in, and read a first and second time; after which it went into a Committee, Mr Edwards in the chair; and on the clauses being read,

Mr Minchin observed, that it would be necessary that some clause should be inserted for preventing the ship's crew from going from the spot they should be carried to, in order that the infection, if there was any, should be prevented from being thereby spread.

" Mr Pitt and Mr Drake said a few words, and it was understood from the former, that the persons being under the bill, of whom the Mayor of Dartmouth would be one, would have power to keep the crew confined to the place that should be built or erected for them.

" The bill was then passed by the Committee, reported, and ordered to be engrossed.

" The House then went into a Committee on the militia bill, Mr Neville in the chair.

" Mr Rushworth went into a short history of the militia of the several counties, and thought that much expence might be saved by reducing the number of Field Officers, which he thought might be done by consolidating the battalions. The honourable member stated, that, by having two battalions, they were doubly officered; but that this would be unnecessary if there was only one battalion, and a saving of at least 18,000 l. a-year be made thereby.

" Sir Edward Affley was of the same opinion, and observed, that the King's troops were not so much crowded with officers as the militia; and that if any saving could be made in the militia, it would be an object worth attending to.

" Mr Mitford said, his situation was rather a delicate one, being an officer in the militia, and one who had been concerned in framing the bill, but he could not agree in any reduction of the officers.—The King's troops, he said, might do with less officers than the militia, because these men were better exercised, and better trained; whereas the militia were in general raw and unexperienced men, and required a great many officers. Nor would it be proper, he thought, to decrease the number of field officers, and increase the subalterns; for the pay of the latter was so small, that able hands would not serve as such, while field officers held that situation an hour; and enough that did credit to it would be found to accept of it. Another reason why he thought two battalions necessary was, that at 'country' elections, a spirit of opposition generally divided the militia into parties, and therefore, while two battalions remained, the two parties knew which side to resort to as most agreeable to their way of thinking, by which much ill will, and perhaps ill blood, was prevented; whereas, if there should be but one battalion, men in opposition to each other would be obliged to serve in one and the same corps, and many disagreeable consequences therefrom ensue.

" Mr Young supported the reasoning of the honourable member.

" The Chairman called upon Mr Rushworth, to know if he had any motion to move upon what he had thrown out.

" Mr Pitt observed, that if the Hon. Gentleman meant to move that the regiments of militia should consist of any specific number, he was at liberty to do it; but was in doubt whether it was the proper time to move for a consolidation of the battalions.

" The bill was then read, and several amendments made, after which it was proceeded through, and ordered to be reported.

" The bill for empowering persons to erect proper places for the recovery of the health of the crew of the Dutch East Indiaman, driven off the port of Dartmouth, was then read a third time, passed, and ordered to the Lords.

" This was the day Mr Jenkinson was to have made his motion with respect to the fisheries; but, when this letter was finished, he did not appear in his place in the House, which was thinner than might have been expected when such an important business was to be taken into consideration."

Mrs Baillie of Carnbroe died at her house, North St David's street, on Wednesday last.

The body of the unfortunate Midshipman of the Race Horse sloop of war, (Cowfurd) who was drowned in January last (as mentioned in our paper) was thrown on shore to the westward of Newhaven on Sunday the 19th instant, after being in the water near two months; and the next day was interred at Leith, attended by a number of naval officers, some of whom knew him in the East Indies, and paid the last tribute they could offer to the remains of an amiable youth.

This day, the Right Hon. James Hunter-Blair, Lord Provost of this city, set out for London, to attend the progress through Parliament, of the intended bill for laying an assessment on the inhabitants for the better support of the Poor, and for other purposes. His Lordship is accompanied by Mr Solicitor General Dundas.

This day, Mr Daniel Patterson, surgeon in the Royal Navy, and now settled in Auchtermuchty, underwent the usual examination before the Royal College of Surgeons, with entire approbation, and received their Surgeon's Diploma accordingly.

On Thursday the 9th current, William Symonds, Esq; of Pengerly, Herefordshire, was elected President of the Natural History Society, in the room of Thomas Beddoes, Esq; resigned.

This day, a charitably disposed Lady sent a Guinea to Captain Robertson for the use of the prisoners in the Tolbooth.

The multiplicity of vagabond beggars, of all sizes and descriptions, with which this city and its environs have been long infested, has called forth just and universal complaints from the inhabitants. A scheme for remedying this intolerable grievance has at last been hit upon, and if vigorously carried into execution, we have no doubt, will have the desired effect. The Sheriff of the County, and the Magistrates of the City having agreed to go hand in hand in removing so disgraceful a nuisance, that business was commenced yesterday, by the officers belonging to both apprehending a number of beggars, who were carried to the Council Chamber, where the Sheriff attended, along with the Magistrates. After examining into their several cases, it was found, that only one, out of about thirty, had any legal right to the charity of either City or County, and that one was the wife of a stout young fellow, who pretends to be a lame sailor. The Sheriff, therefore, in a very spirited and suitable speech, informed them, that as they had no right whatever to become a burden upon this City and County, who found it difficult to maintain their own poor, they must immediately take themselves to the places where they were born, or where they had made such a residence as entitled them to the funds which every parish in Scotland was obliged by law to raise for the support of their respective poor. He said, that they would immediately receive a shilling each, and be allowed till Monday morning, at ten o'clock, to leave the place; but if any of them, after that period, should be found either in the City or County, (and the proper officers belonging to both, had strict orders to watch their motions) they were immediately to be apprehended, committed to prison, and the next Wednesday thereafter publicly whipt through the streets of this city. This discipline to be repeated every time they presumed to return. The Sheriff particularly recommended to them to consider this as a very serious advice, and not as mere words of course; for that both the Magistrates and himself were fully determined to carry the matter into full effect. This motley group of the most ragamuffin, disorderly set that perhaps ever were collected together in one place, were then dismissed, after receiving a shilling a-piece.

The Thames, Thomas Grindlay, from London, arrived in Leith roads the 24th inst. all well.

J. Shaw-Stewart, Esq; has presented Mr Allan M'Aulay, preacher of the gospel, to the church of Greenock, vacant by the death of the Rev. Mr David Turner.

We hear from Perth, that, on Tuesday last, the foundation of a large village, to be called Pitcairn-Green, was laid by the proprietor, Thomas Graham, Esq; of Halgowan. The ceremony was witnessed by Mrs Graham, Lady Christian Graham, &c. &c. amidst the acclamations of a joyful and grateful populace, who were liberally entertained by their beloved landlord. This village, the principal square of which will contain about fourscore houses, is to be built in consequence of an extensive printing-field, lately established in its immediate neighbourhood by Mr William Macalpin, and Co. who are also to erect machinery for the spinning of cotton.—When the forid haunts of indolence are converted into the habitations of prosperous industry, and rapid cultivation spreads itself over the face of the inhospitable waste, we assure ourselves every good citizen will rejoice, and feel a generous interest in the improvement of his country.

Extract of a letter from Nottingham, March 19.

" On Saturday last was tried before Judge Heath, and a special jury, at the assizes held for the County of Nottingham, the important cause between Messrs Robinsons merchants, and Lord Byron, for obstructing the water of the river Leen, which runs through Newstead Park, down to the town of Nottingham, and on which the plaintiffs, Messrs Robinsons, have erected several large and valuable Cotton-works.—The justification set up by the defendant, was proved groundless; and the plaintiffs right to the water course clearly established to the satisfaction of a crowded Court."

Extract of a letter from Virginia, to his friend in Glasgow, dated Jan. 22. 1786.

" I have now to acquaint you, that our Assembly broke up last night, without passing any law respecting the payment of British debts. The gentlemen who introduced and supported the bill, seeing that no efficient act would pass, and that it gave rise to much heat and animosity, gave it up, and it consequently lay unnoticed the remainder of the session. The only act which has passed, in the event of which British subjects are interested, is that for laying an additional duty of 3 s. 9 d. per ton on all foreign vessels, those belonging to the States having a commercial treaty with America excepted."

SOUND INTELLIGENCE.

Extract of a letter from Elsinore, March 4.

" Since our last of the 25th ult. the frost has been more severe than at any time during the winter. The Sound is entirely shut, and the wind blowing sharp at N. N. E. seems to threaten us with a long frost."

S I R, March 24, 1786.

A S the members of the College of Justice, as well as other Citizens, seem to think the proposed Poor's Rate an improper measure; and as the Magistrates, or those who support it, profess to be actuated by disinterested motives; and consequently do not merit the odium which hath been attempted to be laid on them; if I can shew, that the sum wanted, for support of the poor, can be made effectual without any new burden being imposed on the inhabitants, I do think both parties will be somewhat obliged to me for finding the ways and means, without taking a sixpence of addition from them, or even commutating any of the present taxes for others more grievous. My plan is shortly this:—Give to the poor the surplus of the sums already levied. I will, perhaps, be told, There is no surplus: But that there is, I shall immediately shew.

In the printed Proposals, some time ago distributed, which I have just now seen for the first time, the land-tax, payable by the city of Edinburgh, is stated at

Collector's salary, fire-engines, &c. 400 o

L: 3250 o

Paid thus:

By the inhabitants of Leith, L: 270

Canongate, 190

Edinburgh, 2760

Cess on trade, 30

3250 o

By the above state, it no doubt appears, that not a single sixpence too much is collected. But, Sir, I do say, and will maintain, that there is upwards of 700 l. levied more than sufficient to pay the land-tax; because the cess payable to his Majesty by Edinburgh, in place of

So that there is of overplus, L: 732 14 A sum more than sufficient to support the poor; for, in these same Proposals, it is said, "that an addition of at least 500 l. Sterling per annum is necessary." Now here is an overplus fund of 732 l. 14 s. yearly, unaccounted for, which ought to be applied to that purpose; and unless that money is shown to be otherwise applied, I think it would be no more than prudent and just in the Magistrates to drop the Poor's Rate Bill. At any rate, the above certainly merits an explanation. A CITIZEN.

MONEY LOST.

Edinburgh, March 24, 1786.

THAT this day there was LOST by JOHN RENTON, driver of a Stage Coach between Edinburgh and Dalkeith, upon the High Street of Edinburgh, or in the Parliament Square, or upon the road between Dalkeith and Edinburgh, a SMALL POCKET BOOK, containing L: 60 Sterling in Bank Notes, &c. Two Twenty Pound Notes of the Bank of Scotland, and Two Ten Pound Notes of the Bank of Scotland.

Whoever has found the above Pocket Book and Bank Notes, or can give such information as will lead to a discovery thereof, upon applying to the said John Renton, or to William Scott, procurator fiscal of the county of Edinburgh, shall be handsomely rewarded, and no questions asked.

The number of the Notes are known, and notice thereof given at all the Banks and Banking-houses in Edinburgh, so that if offered to be changed, they will be stopped; and the person in whose custody they are discovered after this notice, will be prosecuted with the utmost rigour of law.

Merchant Company.

AT a very full Meeting of the Company of Merchants of the city of Edinburgh, held on the 23d March 1762; the Company having taken into consideration the Heads of a Bill about to be brought into Parliament by the Lord Provost and Magistrates, "for granting an aid to the funds destined for support of the poor of the city, and for executing several public improvements," they highly and unanimously approved of the same in all its parts, provided the Members of the College of Justice shall be subjected with the other inhabitants to payment of the fund to be established for supporting the poor; and they most heartily wish with the Bill that succeeds it, to justify merits, as well for the humanity of its object, in obtaining a regular establishment for support of the poor, as the justice of its principle, in making such establishment an equal burden on every description of inhabitants, without any partial exemption, and on account too, of the other proposed improvements, the execution of which promise to be of great convenience and utility to the town.

Thereafter, on a motion from the Master,
Resolved unanimously,

That the thanks of the Company be returned to the Right Honourable JAMES HUNTER BLAIR, Lord Provost, for the ability he has displayed, and the very great trouble he has taken since coming into the high office his Lordship so distinguishedly fills, in preparing and promoting many useful, elegant, and necessary improvements, the execution of which is so agreeable to the inhabitants, and must prove so highly convenient and ornamental to the city; and for his disinterested openness and candour in the providing means for accomplishing these noble ends.

JAMES JOLIE, Clerk.

EDINBURGH, 24th MARCH 1786.

THE Incorporation of Goldsmiths in the city of Edinburgh being duly assembled, and having taken under consideration the heads of a Bill proposed to be brought into Parliament, "for granting an aid to the funds destined for the support of the poor of said city, and for certain other improvements thereto set forth." They unanimously approved,

TO BE SOLD BY PRIVATE BARGAIN, And entered to at Whitunday next,

THAT large and commodious House with the ground and offices at the Abbeyhill, as lately possessed by Mr Erskine of Mar.

The house consists of three storeys, containing a handsome dining-room and drawing-room, five bed-rooms, with closets, &c. hall, kitchen, larder, milk-house, and wine cellar.

The kitchen is large and completely fitted up with all proper fixtures, and the cellar with catacombs. There are likewise two other bed-rooms newly built, over the kitchen, with a bed and dressing closet in each; and adjoining to the kitchen there is a house, consisting of servants apartments, and an ale cellar with catacombs. There is a pump-well and wash house, with coach-house, hay-loft, byre, and a stable for six horses.

The ground consists of about an acre and half, and is remarkably pleasant in situation.

This subject will be sold considerably below its real value; and any person inclining to know further particulars will please apply to Laurence Ingilis writer, Merchant Street.
